

1 ABSTRACT

2 A stent has a tubular body with longitudinal struts interconnected by multi-bar linkages. The 3 struts inhibit foreshortening of the body and relative rotation between the links in the linkages
4 permits radial expansion. The links are plastically deformed as they are expanded to maintain 5 the expanded diameter.